Meet the obstetrician partners who've been caring for women and delivering babies in Brunswick for nearly two decades

Finding the right doctor to guide you through a pregnancy or to provide gynecologic care — or both — isn't always easy. Women want a physician with plenty of experience, someone they feel comfortable with and can trust — a real health care partner.

Margaret H. Goodman, M.D., FACOG, and Shirley D. Wilson, M.D., FACOG, board-certified obstetricians and gynecologists with Southeast Georgia Physician Associates-Obstetrics & Gynecology, a strategic affiliate of the Health System, understand the importance of building a long-lasting partnership, too, both with their patients and within their own practice. In fact, the two physicians have been in practice together for two and a half decades.

"We met at Fort Benning, in Georgia, 26 years ago when we were both in the military," Dr. Goodman says. "I remember, because we each have a child and they were about 6 months old when we got there, and they're both 26 now."

and Shirley D. Wilson, M.D.

Both physicians worked for two years at Martin Army Community Hospital before deciding to go into practice together at Taylor Regional Hospital in Hawkinsville, Ga., where they practiced for five years. "Because most of our family lives in Brunswick, we decided to move in 1998 and have been in practice here ever since," Dr. Wilson says.

A Wealth of Experience

Besides delivering thousands of babies over the years, Drs. Goodman and Wilson provide a full range of women's health services, from routine exams, incontinence and menopause management to gynecological surgery, and are both certified in da Vinci® robotic surgery for hysterectomy.

"We've been in practice together for this long, and it's kind of a great place to be," Dr. Goodman says. "It's been an honor and a privilege to practice obstetrics and gynecology. The longer we're in it, the more we take pride and pleasure in the services we provide our community." ●
