Colonel Thomas W. Fuller, USA (Ret) has given a lifetime of service to his country and his community. After serving in the United States Army for 34 years, this Georgia native returned to his hometown of Brunswick, where he began channeling his energies into volunteerism.

He is a founding member of the Southeast Georgia Health System Foundation, the philanthropic arm of the Health System, and now serves as a Director Emeritus.

But perhaps his greatest satisfaction comes from his involvement with the Southeast Georgia Health System Senior Care Center-Brunswick. Having had family members and friends as residents in the Center, Colonel Fuller was able to observe firsthand the care residents receive on a daily basis. “The quality of care given at the Senior Care Center is outstanding. The facility is clean and comfortable, and each resident is treated with tender loving care. While in the U.S. Army, I saw many medical facilities around the world; I can assure you, this Center is truly first class.”

Colonel Fuller can be found visiting and talking with residents at the Senior Care Center several days per week. “The Senior Care Center is a true and necessary asset to this community, and I’m proud to play a part in whatever way I can.”
